■ Guide to Featured Works

3. Hitoshi Nomura, Analemma Series

For Hitoshi Nomura (1945-2023), intangible phenomena in outer space and nature have been his motifs since the 1960s. For example, the word "analemma" in the title is an astronomical term that refers to the non-uniform rate of change in the movement of the sun. Nomura captured the analemma phenomenon in this work, revealing the movement as a figure-eight pattern when photographed at the same time of day and place for a year.

The movement of the sun is something we normally notice, but the infinitely ( $\infty$ ) repeating nature of time and regularly occurring cycles only become available to our senses by way of a camera or through human action.

4-7. Hiroshi Sugimoto, Seascapes Series

Hiroshi Sugimoto (1948-), who mastered the medium of photography both technically and aesthetically, has created outstanding works of art that have been exhibited at major museums throughout the world. He received the Mainichi Art Award in 1989 and the Hasselblad Foundation International Award in Photography in 2001.

For Seascapes, one of his most well-known series which he began in 1980, Sugimoto shot image after image of oceans and skies around the globe, each with the same simple, rigorous and ascetic composition, to achieve a sublime expression of time. His photos, most of which are monochromatic, are invocations of pure light. Given that the word "photograph" is derived from the Greek words for "light" and "drawing," the daytime and nighttime seas in Sugimoto's Seascapes may rightly be called "paintings of light."

9. Xu Lin, Landscapes of the Four Seasons, Ming dynasty, 17th century, China

These paintings comprise a set of four hanging scrolls of the four seasons, each with a poem with seven syllables per line. Such paintings of literary or historical subjects or historical figures, set within a landscape setting, were particularly widespread during the latter part of the Ming dynasty.

10. Kano Eitoku, Tiger in a bamboo grove, Momoyama period, 16th century

The tiger, a sacred foreign animal and a symbol of wealth, status and fertility, was often depicted as an auspicious subject in paintings. Pictures of fierce animals were used to guard entrances or placed where quiet gatherings took place as an indication to the visitors of the authority of the host. These paintings, which once covered the walls of the room, show a bucolic scene of a mother and her cub resting under bamboo trees blown by the wind. There is little evidence that the scene was intended to intimidate guests as they enter the vestibule.

13-16. About Collaborative set of twelve paintings by artists of the Kano school

Collaborative set of twelve paintings by artists of the Kano school is a collection of 12 paintings by 10 central figures of the Kano school who were active from the late Momoyama to the early Edo period. These included a young Kano Tanyū (1602–1674), his father Kano Takanobu (1571–1618), Kano Nagatoshi (1577–1654), the younger brother of the famed Kano Eitoku and Kano Sadanobu (1597–1623), the eldest son of Kano Mitsunobu. These works are thought to have originally formed a pair of six-panel folding screens, but were later remounted as twelve hanging scrolls. A label with a date on the inside of the box cover suggests this occurred in 1787. In terms of subject matter, the paintings depict what may be called “legendary or historical figures from classical Chinese stories.” They are valuable examples of Kano school elements that were refined and formalized into the Edo Kano style.
